

BANGLADESH FACT SHEET

Diakonia is a force, a movement, a hope. We never stop, always evolve and fight tirelessly for a just, equal and sustainable future.

Who We Are

For a world without violence, oppression and poverty.

A world where gender justice and peace are not just a possibility, but a reality. Where we together take responsibility for each other and for the earth. A future where patriarchal structures are a memory. Where ALL people are free. In many ways the world is a better place than when we started our work in 1966. But at the same time, we see worrying signs of the progress being under threat, growing resistance against gender equality, a backlash for democracy and a global climate crisis.

The worlds' challenges are complex.

As lasting change is our goal, we need to change the underlying norms, power relations and structures that hold people in violence, oppression and poverty. To do that we work closely together with the people affected. We analyse, adapt and adjust our methods depending on where we are and what we are changing.

We are not looking for quick fixes.

We know that for change to happen we need three parts:

- Knowledge
- Mobilization
- Action

Diakonia partners are working in twenty-five districts in eight divisions in Bangladesh.

How We Work

Diakonia operates in partnership with NGOs in Bangladesh, increasing awareness and respect for human rights and gender equality, improving access to social and economic resources and resilience building of climate change affected communities together with humanitarian support, as required. The work is carried out in both rural and urban areas of the country.

To find smart solutions we need to really understand problems and their roots. As lasting change is our goal, we strive to change the underlying norms, power relations and structures that hold people in violence, oppression and poverty.

To do that we work closely together with the people affected. We analyse, adapt and adjust our methods depending on where we are and what we are changing.

But for this to transform into actual change people need to come together, grow together and mobilize.

Rights can be claimed, defended, expressed and advocated depending on each context.

OUR THEORY OF CHANGE

Diakonia's Theory of Change is at the core of all our work. We adapt the Theory of Change to each change process we engage in, and aspire to be adaptive, responsive and agile in complex and unpredictable contexts.

The Theory of Change is made up of three building blocks. These are seen as parts of a whole, with all parts needed for change to be sustainable.

Knowledge

We believe that people change the world. People's drive and passion combined with knowledge of their rights and of the root causes of their lack of fulfilment is the trigger for change.

Mobilisation

We believe that the destructive paradigms of patriarchy, unsustainable growth, exclusion and inequality are most effectively challenged when people come together, grow together and take collective action.

Action

The third and final building block regards the nature of the action and towards whom it is directed. They can be claimed, defended, expressed and advocated as determined by each context, from the very local level to national or international level. The change we seek need to happen in the formal and informal arenas of structures, such as institutions and legislation, and the social norms in society.

We are not looking for quick fixes. We know that for change to happen we need three parts: knowledge, mobilisation and action.

Where we focus

Our main strategy is to operate through country programmes, but also to develop our regional and global added value for regional and global programming. Based on our experiences and expertise, we believe that focusing on the three below interlinked areas is the best way for us to contribute to eradicating poverty, inequality, oppression. All our work shall thus be rooted in these interlinked areas.

Gender Justice

Human Rights

Democracy
